For example, you can add a background to an image, or you can add additional text over the top of the image without affecting the original text. Photoshop layers enable you to create the layered look in your images. Photoshop layers are available for both raster and vector-based images, and they enable you to work on multiple layers simultaneously. With the power of layers, you can manipulate the layers and the image areas as a group. Layers come with basic and advanced features: * Basic Layers: No additional features beyond basic layer visibility. * Advanced Layers: Add text, raster and vector objects to a layer, as well as create a layer mask to control the visibility of an object. * Group Layers: A single layer with multiple objects on it, such as one area that contains a title, and another area with text. You can control the visibility of individual elements by creating a layer mask. You can create a layer mask to control the visibility of an element over the entire group. * Smart Objects: A new image layer containing an underlying, independent object that can be edited separately and has its own layer-editing features. For example, a smart object can contain a raster image, vector text, or a photograph. Smart objects enable you to make a single, independent image layer that can be edited like any other image layer. This enables you to access additional layer editing tools, such as creating layers and layer masks. Figure 1-1 shows a typical example of the layers found in Photoshop CS6. In the image, the top layer is the photograph. Layer 1 is the raster layer for the subject's face and the lettering on the wall behind it, Layer 2 is the raster layer for the design at the bottom, and Layer 3 is the layer used for the text on the wooden post at the top. Figure 1-1 shows the image without smart

Zoopla.co.uk is proud to announce that it has been ranked by Best Startups, an invitation-only community of tech entrepreneurs, for the ninth consecutive year. The capital markets publisher ranked 150 British startups to come out on top of the Top 50 UK Startups list, a community built around the country's best startups and digital brands. The index is compiled by industry experts and seed-stage investors and covers technology-based companies, such as mobile apps, ecommerce, alternative finance, foodtech, 3D printing, health and education. Rankings were collated across the following criteria: Winner of Best Startups competition (which looks at delivery) Winner of Best Digital Brand competition Winner of Most Innovative Brand competition Winner of Best Mobile App competition The Top 50 UK Startups index also ranked the country's top 150 startups, and The Guardian came out at number one, marking the third consecutive year in which the technology publisher has seen a Guardian brand top the list. Zoopla is now available on the Apple App Store and Google Play. Speaking of the news, Darren Campbell, Zoopla Group CEO, said: "It is always gratifying to see the success of our businesses making the prestigious list, and the fact that we have done so consecutively is a testament to our relentless approach and devotion to our brands and our users. The dynamic nature of the tech world means that the landscape evolves faster than ever, and the key to staying ahead is our commitment to continue innovating and creating products our users find useful and enjoyable." Mark Levy, CEO of Best Startups, said: "We are delighted to confirm Zoopla as the winner of this year's Best Startups competition, and look forward to working with them over the coming years. The growth of Zoopla has mirrored the explosive uptake of online rental services in the UK and it is a credit to them for capitalising on this changing market." The winner of the UK's Best Digital Brand competition was GoCardless, the UK-based fintech company behind merchant account provider, PayPal Later. The winner of the UK's Most Innovative Brand was iProspect, the online lead generation company behind email marketing platform, AgentPulse.
