You know the feeling of getting an email from a domain you haven't previously visited, and not being able to forward it to a different address, because your email client doesn't know where to deliver it? With the new Domains feature in Windows 10, you don't need to worry about that anymore, because your email client will automatically know how to forward emails sent from domains it doesn't recognise! With the new Domains feature, you can now access Gmail and Microsoft domains such as hotmail, outlook.com, live and yahoo.com directly from your email client. Domains is the perfect solution to those who already use a popular email service, but want their old email address to be valid on a different service. Unlike the new universal sync feature (which requires device usage for syncing contacts and emails) Domains service can be used independently, and thus allows you to change email address on a device that's not synced to a PC. You can search a Windows Domain name from the left sidebar in Outlook 2013 or add one from the list of domains and perform a right click and choose to change the email address. All your domains in Outlook 2013 will be stored in the Domains list, and this list will be synchronized between devices so that the old and the new email address will be used everywhere. This is the easiest and most natural way to keep your email address updated.
