I have a COB (ARM Cortex-M3) and a BCM (ARM Cortex-M0) and i m stucked to uVision on BCM, how i can install MDK-ARM to use on COB? Are the supported processor families decided by the device family and what can I do on the others? what do you think about MDK-ARM on the ARM Cortex-M3 for ICS? Could you give me some advice? Sep 25, 2015 I have a problem to install MDK-ARM from MDK-ARM 4.60 on Arm Cortex-M3. At the moment, I have a build error, when I try to create the project . I have the same problem. I can not install MDK-ARM 4.70. It's very usefull tool. Even if I have some debug problem on BCM. But It's very old tool. And I have an error to install MDK-ARM. Function Fails to get DateTime I am trying to run a query to get the DateTime. I figured that since this type is considered a primitive type in Azure DocumentDB, then I would use a Function for this (in addition to the query parameter). For this
I have the following Function (in Javascript): function getDate(path, context) { return context.bindings.Doc.DateTime; } When I run this I get the error: { "code": "BadRequest", "message": "Function 'getDate' can't return DateTime values." } If I change the above Function to return the string value for the DateTime, the error is: { "code": "BadRequest", "message": "Invalid function type. Cannot return String values from the function. Please use a supported type, such as DBTime." }
Am I doing something wrong with the Function, or is this a bug in DocumentDB (or am I not using the correct approach)? A: In DocumentDB you can use the following types of input parameters: string, number, int64, float, bool, [T], { T },
Null The ", " character is not supported, but you can escape the comma by using double backslashes "" like in the following example: [ { "_id": { $date: \"20170824T 82138339de
