This is your first chance to see what Plutovision is working on. In late 2015 we were determined to present a ground breaking new camera at the Shot Show in Las Vegas. That camera, and the extensive engineering involved in producing the cube produced a camera that seemed like science fiction. The Plutovision team knew it was worth continuing the effort, and our first few prototypes were proof of the potential and power of this next generation of the Plutovision Camera System. Today, we are humbled to bring the highly anticipated Cube Camera to fruition. We can't wait to see the reactions and the pictures you

Meeting Cost Clock For Windows 8

Meetings are a classic part of the corporate culture of every organization. Most of the time, the meetings are used in order to facilitate the work. People meet to handle specific issues and to exchange data. Me...DownloadQ: Callback for ajax response in php I have a problem and I need a help :) I have a page call eg. test.php and it returns the html contents of test.php directly if id is less than 10. Other pages return the html if the id is greater than 10. What I want to do now is to implement ajax when the page returns the html with the id less than 10 and the html with id greater than 10 So I implemented a function in php if id is greater than 10 that redirect the page to test.php. I am using the redirect because when I return a simple html file it does not work if I did not use the redirect The problem is, this does not work as I expect. If I want to make it work I have to manually refresh the page and the data is loaded correctly. So my question is what callback should I use if I do not want to refresh the page manually? Would be grateful for any suggestions. test.php ajax $.ajax({ url: "test.php", type: 'GET', dataType: 'html', data: { id : 5 }, success: function(data) { //do something } }); A: Try this 10){ header("Location: ". $_GET['id']); }
