Silk Road is a website containing a great deal of information about the history of the Silk Road. The data is updated daily with supplementary information, which makes the presentation of the subject much more interesting. The Silk Road knowledge base is organized in short sentences, which are gradually displayed on the screen, along with the afferent images. right to use them to which the patentee is entitled." Id. The secondary right of a licensee to practice the patent cannot be used to "assert a claim in derogation of the exclusive rights given to a patentee by the patent laws." Id. at 1361-62. In addition to the partnership with Commerce and the payment of royalties based on the payments made pursuant to the contract, T-H also maintained a relationship with Commerce that derived from the license. The facts reveal that Commerce licensed T-H to use the patents pursuant to a Distribution Agreement. The first paragraph of the Distribution Agreement grants Commerce a nonexclusive, nontransferable, nontransferable to third party, license to use the patents. The contract explicitly states that Commerce has the right to use the patents in such a manner as is "necessary for the normal and usual operation of the business activities of the Licensee." (Distribution Agreement at 1). This language is standard in contracts granting patents to businesses, and has been found to allow the licensee to practice the patent. Alice Corp. v. CLS Bank, 573 U.S. ___, 134 S.Ct. 2347, 2358, 189 L.Ed.2d 279 (2014) ("[T]he contract at issue in this case grants [the patent holder] a nonexclusive license to practice its patent.") Further, T-H granted Commerce an option to purchase the patents, which Commerce exercised. Commerce contends that the patents are not used because the licenses are under the Commerce-T-H agreements that pay royalties only to T-H. T-H argues that Commerce exercised its option to purchase, and the agreement was for the exclusive use of the patents in the context of marketing and selling Commerce's products. Even if the licenses are invalid, Commerce is still the holder of the patents. The right of a licensee to practice the patent is dependent upon the license and is granted by the patent. Therefore, Commerce is the holder of a right to use the patent and the general partnership with Commerce has a corresponding right to practice the patent. T-H does not have a right to use the patents, much less an exclusive right to use
