Determination of proton-induced breakthrough curves of radioactive gas in an indoor environment. A method is presented to measure the breakthrough curve of a radioactive gas as the height of radioactivity of a stream of air drawn through a sample capsule containing the material of interest. The method makes use of the gamma-ray emissions of the gas induced by the radioactive decay of a radionuclide inside the capsule. Based on some simulations, it was found that the breakthrough curves could be recorded to different degrees of precision, depending on the radionuclide and its radioactive decay mode. The method was tested with two gases, one containing a heavy-flowing component and the other containing a highly volatile gas with a short half-life. A breakthrough curve with a high degree of reproducibility was found for the heavy-flowing gas. In contrast, the breakthrough curve of the volatile gas showed a much higher degree of fluctuation in time, which cannot be reduced to the level obtained by the heavy-flowing gas. This is attributed to the desorption of the volatile gas from the air samples in the sample capsule, with the result that more radioactive counts are recorded in the detector after the capsule is emptied.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an electronic apparatus and an electrical device.
2. Description of the Related Art An image pickup device configured by an optical system such as a lens, and an image pickup element such as a CCD and a CMOS is used in a mobile telephone, a digital still camera, a camera on a mobile information terminal, a surveillance camera and the like. When a user uses a mobile telephone, for example, the user needs to transmit or receive an electronic mail, a text, a picture and the like. Further, an image captured by a camera is more convenient than a character and a picture displayed on a screen of a mobile telephone for the user. However, in a case of an image captured by a camera on a mobile terminal, for example, it is necessary to perform a series of processes such as an image data conversion into a JPEG data, a correction process such as a tone adjustment by using an image retouch application and the like in order to display an image on
