Trying to setup a rails app locally, first time to use rails 4 instead of 3.1.2. I've got a bunch of apps working, with no breaking changes, but now there are some deprecations and how to fix those have become too detailed for me. If my app is a solid gem as a whole (a gem that serves different applications), is there a straightforward way to migrate it from rails 3 to rails 4? Maybe just an update the Gemfile to point to rails 4, and then just run bundle install? But I'm running into the problem that a lot of gems have breaking changes between rails 3 and rails 4. For instance, I have a gem that generates a bunch of js files from YUI widgets. That gem is still very popular, and has been downloaded thousands of times. It looks like YUI has changed the way that its widgets work, and I need to update to get things working with rails 4. Is there any best practices for this kind of case? A: You will have to update some code, and re-test for bugs. It isn't a trivial task and is going to take some planning. A good start would be to read the guides for upgrading existing rails apps. From the Guides: "We encourage you to migrate your existing application gradually, in batches. The difference is that a migration doesn't require changing your code, you are instead moving your application, version by version. This way you can iron out bugs, apply deprecations and readjust your application to work with the latest version of Rails. You can do this by applying the rails upgrade recipes in the guides." This question was also asked on the rails forums: What are the major changes I should know about? Here's another example which shows a migration from 1.8 to 2.0. In the first part of this blog series we look at how aquaria have changed over the last century. In the 1920s aquaria were moving into a new era: from a recreational activity into a cultural phenomenon. The new wave of aquaria became a more specialized, scientific endeavor, a good example of which is the Museum of Science, the forerunner of science museums today. It is also in the 1920s that aquaria really started to change. The first polyps of coral reefs were being discovered and aquaria became a place where one could see how these organisms live together, from the very beginning, to a better understanding. In the 1930s, aquaria made a transition to the space age. We saw the first space exploration, first human missions to the moon, first telescopic images of the sky. Aquaria were then a good way for people to see how to make the transition to space, into the new era of space, into better understanding of the universe. The 1950s are remembered for helping make space exploration a reality. As we entered the space era, aquaria wanted to show visitors the first images of Earth. Aquaria were now helping tell the story of life on Earth. The 1960s and the 1970s, the time of flower power, revolution, hippies, rock and roll
