Timming of Western music, the device for the staging of the aria, is defined by a written score, i.e. a piece of music written down on a paper for a vocal performance. The conductor is in charge of the aria's timing, i.e. he is the one who tells the singer when to begin, when to stop and what to sing. The conductor knows aria aria from the stage performance, and he can choose a specific spot in the score, depending on the importance of the words in that particular part. Written scores were first introduced in the middle ages by Palestrina and other composers, who used their musical skills to reflect human emotions. Aria is a complex form of vocal music having a fixed number of phrases and a defined vocal range. Both the aria and the orchestra may include a solo and a choir. The classical type of music (classical music) is usually divided into vocal and instrumental music. But, nowadays the classical music is not limited to these two genres. For example, rock n roll music has its own classical form, which is called jazz music. The solo form of classical music, as a part of instrumental music genre, is called a solo or instrumental. The French term for a solo is a solo, and the English term is solo. The full range of instrumentation for an aria aria aria is written in a separate part called the orchestral part. It usually consists of several sections: 1. String 1st Violins 2nd Violins Violas Cellos Bassos. In the Renaissance period, each section was played by a distinct group of instrumentalists who shared a style and played in different sizes. The section groups are reflected in the score. 1. 1st Violins 2nd Violins Violas Cellos Bassos. The string section is usually written in the lower voice part, but the brass, woodwinds
