Predictors for Vitamin D Status, AMI and Sudden Cardiac Arrest. Biological markers are helpful for identifying patients at risk for chronic diseases. This study aimed at determining the predictors of Vitamin D status and high-risk subgroups of acute myocardial infarction (AMI) and sudden cardiac arrest (SCA). This cross-sectional study included a total of 514 patients, of whom 198 patients were in AMI and 316 in SCA. Vitamin D deficiency was more prevalent in AMI (30.3%) than SCA (15.9%) patients. Vitamin D deficiency was significantly more prevalent among smokers, overweight/obese patients and in those who had any symptoms for cardiovascular diseases, had a prolonged QTc, had history of hypertension, diabetes mellitus, obesity, low physical activity, kidney disease, sleep disorders, pulmonary diseases, and suffered a recent AMI (≤ 3 months). Patients with deficient or deficient with supplemented vitamin D status had significantly higher 30-day mortality ($P=0.036$) than did the patients with sufficient vitamin D status. Severe deficiency of vitamin D is a significant predictor of 30-day mortality. Vitamin D deficiency is associated with a significantly increased risk of AMI and SCA. Further large prospective studies and observational studies are needed to confirm these findings.
