... and so on with 3 to 4 pages of todo's. I run this in Python and to solve the typical memory leak I have a static variable `static obj = None` And I want to load the content from an indented line when `obj` not `None`. I'm struggling with some basic pattern matching, especially when you have a very large code base where it is hard to figure out what to do and when. I used to use `@functools.lru_cache(None)` but there is a difficulty in understanding the size of an exception. Here is an example.

def open(item): global obj
if item == '1':
    if obj: # do stuff with the value of obj, it is too mutable
        obj[1]['2'].append('1')
        obj.remove('1')
    else:
        if obj == '2': # do stuff with the value of obj, it is too mutable
            obj[2]['2'].append('1')
            obj.remove('1')
a lot of other code I wish I could do something like:
def open(item): global obj
if item == '1':
    if obj[1][2]: # do stuff with the value of obj, it is too mutable

What's new in Fantasy Grounds - Pathfinder RPG - Ruins Of Azlant AP 5: Tower Of The Drowned Dead (PFRPG):

Fated Souls (released as The Caverns of Karraklor in Canada) is a racing video game created by British studio Psygnosis, and published and developed by Psygnosis. It was released for the PlayStation in the United Kingdom on the 20 August 1997. Originally it was to be a 1992-style run/gun game, which became a 1996-style arcade game, and this was limited on release due to the absence of an engine at this time. A secondary version was released, the Atari Jaguar version, in Australia and Europe with several graphical and gameplay changes. The game was never released outside the PAL region. After Psygnosis shut down, development was taken over by MPI, who released the game as Fated Souls in 2000. Here the game did not expand on the arcade remakes, but continues the story of a race fixer. This new version had graphical improvements, and a final boss. Like the Arcade version, this Fated Souls version was never released outside the PAL region.

Gameplay Fated Souls is a racing game with illegal, high-tech vehicles called engines that have either levitation or a 'Turbo Boost' feature. The player's task is to race their engine through a maze of cavernous tunnels, capturing flags and beating other racers. The engine is the main player character, as it must attack and dodge other competitors and hazards present in the game, either by levitating, shooting the opponents, using turbo boost to gain extra speed, or any combination of them. The player must choose to use one of the three engine models. Using levitation and turbo boost, gives more speed in a straight line, but is less effective in corners and against static obstacles. Conversely, shooting gives extra attack power and increased turns, but only moves slowly when a straight speed boost is used. The race takes place in a curved three-dimensional environment, which can be accessed in different ways and passes through a customizable track. Each track has three types of tunnels, not simply linear or circular, but with a variety of layout.

The player's main goal is to travel a specific amount of distance (from the starting point of the track) against other racers, whilst also making it past the final gates. To win, the player must complete a certain amount of laps, using a scoring system, with points for beating other engines, and time bonuses for remaining ahead, varying depending on how much distance is completed. Along the way, the player must defeat
