The data collected from player movements is used to power the mechanics of the FIFA 22 game engine. Players run faster, jump higher and recover from headers faster than in previous FIFA titles. A new engine feature allows players to change direction more naturally as they approach a player in an in-game tackle or intercept a pass. The physics engine has been revamped to better understand the real world movements of each player. Players will move with more grace and weight as they run and tackle, and will better follow through on volleys and headers. Artificial Intelligence (AI) has been improved to better pass and shoot intelligently when the player is under pressure and the "real-world" player model has been incorporated into the AI. Players who play with all-out intensity are more difficult to beat than in previous FIFA titles. "The EA SPORTS Player Impact Engine is incredibly sophisticated and it's the only one on the market that accurately and realistically simulates the physics of the real world using actual-world player and ball movement and collisions," commented Ian Bellamy, Senior Producer on FIFA 22. "It is important to highlight that we've worked extremely hard to balance this engine to allow everyone to enjoy playing with the same amount of skill and challenge, but also make it fun, enjoyable and fair." In FIFA 22, the Global Gameplay Engine (GGE) is based on what was learned from player feedback from previous FIFA titles. The engine has been redeveloped to give players greater control and flexibility, improve the overall feel of the game and allow for further improvements. "We wanted to add character and weight to the game's movements. We also wanted to have a much more realistic dribbling system that allows players to use their feet and legs correctly, run at pace and make moves in any direction," Bellamy continued. "While we've always tried to make the game feel weighty and chunky, with a heavy feel, now it feels as though players run with weight and weightier movement." FIFA 22 introduces two new features: dribbling and marking. The FIFA 2k Video Assistant Referee (VAR) is also introduced in a further evolution of its existing role in the game, offering more control over the flow of the match.
