Our results did not show a significantly increased risk of relapse and possibly due to the small number of patients. It is also important to consider the potential implications for disease control. When evaluating the benefits of DMTs the loss or gain of the DMT over-time could mask the relationship between DMT benefit and control of relapse activity in patients as observed in our study. Ideally, we would have expected to see the effect of DMTs to persist over time and be stronger/overly protective. However, if we assess the effect of DMTs over a fixed period of time (weeks) and mix the results from our previous one-year visit and present data from 6 months, we would have to mention that our findings from the primary 1-year visit cannot predict the outcome of the rest of follow-up. Our results are therefore not path-breaking with regard to the notion
