It will be interesting to see how the balance works out, since Ratti was in the lead with a consistent margin most of the game. It will be interesting to see how the balance works out, since Ratti was in the lead with a consistent margin most of the game. I don't see it being that close, but I also wouldn't be surprised if Chani wins by the skin of his teeth, especially considering his mistakes with all his weight on the whites. This will be a tough last match to watch - one that will definitely have its share of ups and downs and we'll have to see if Chani can push for the win after Ratti was able to recover so quickly from that losing position at the end of the second set. analysis JcpdsÂ . Great work. I followed your how-to (ssh-ing to an ubuntu machine for the first time from my windows machine) and I now have a bug report for python-igraph!
We've been able to create arbitrary graphs using igraph (one of the most powerful and popular python libraries for graph-structures).
However, when we tried to link them to the igraph python modules with the dependent package, igraph didn't build! It seems to us that there could be a better solution. If we remember that the igraph python module is only a wrapper around the native C library, we would like to suggest that the python-igraphdevel package could depend on the python-igraph-module-%gw% package. %gw% is the short name of an igraph module. We are working on a python-igraph rewrite, which will probably be faster (the igraph project is pretty old, and the author doesn't have a modern process to manage the project). We are also working on a solution to build python-igraph without any devel-version dependencies, but this will take a little more time. Nice work. I'll have to look at python-igraph to get a better sense of how it works. Is there something like Synergy for Ubuntu? I would imagine that something like that could be possible. For instance, I might be able to port the Synergy code. Is there already a python-igraph port to python 3.4? There seems to be a port listed in github. As far as I know it's the only package on PyPI with a current release. Is there an osx version? Great work.
