The media's obsession with Beto O'Rourke's underdog-turned-frontrunner campaign for U.S. Senate is a reminder that O'Rourke is just one piece of a national populist story that's still unfolding. His relatively successful Senate campaign highlights and participates in a story much bigger than himself. Even as O'Rourke's rise has repeatedly been exaggerated, the media is still highly intrigued by him and his brand of unscripted campaigning and urban populism. Beto O'Rourke may have won a U.S. Senate seat in Texas on Tuesday, but in the coming weeks, the media's obsession with him will be a reminder that he's still just one part of a much larger story. O'Rourke built a national following through his 2018 Senate run against Republican Ted Cruz, the businessman turned politician who was seen as the embodiment of the GOP establishment. O'Rourke repeatedly drew comparisons to Barack Obama and even focused his campaign in a state where Obama fell short in 2012. O'Rourke even flew to Iowa to campaign for Chris Christie's 2013 gubernatorial run. In contrast to Cruz's steely message of "hope and change" delivered with Hollywoodish populist flair, O'Rourke was an early adopter of social media and early supporter of Democratic messaging. He held rallies featuring live-streamed videos of his wife talking about the costs of living and her campaign in Spanish. He delivered a simple, emotional stump speech at the Republican National Convention, much of which focused on the tone and composition of the Trump administration. The narrative around O'Rourke could be summed up with the slogan "He Made Her Cry," referring to a viral video of him bawling during the September presidential debate. And if you thought he was going to lose in November, a number of factors — including some of his own mistakes and issues with his Democratic opponent, U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke, which he never addressed in his failed Senate run — made it seem likely that we'd be talking about him in the 2020 presidential race. But O'Rourke has just emerged from a Senate campaign in a red state that Trump won in 2016 as the winning Democratic candidate. Perhaps more importantly, Republicans passed a health care bill in the Senate this week that O'Rourke rode to victory on in 2018. And as House Democrats are preparing to run the table in a wave election for the House and

The family of a University of Denver student accused of killing a stranger while texting and driving in July has started an online fundraiser to pay for a "K-9 Extortion Task Force" to prevent similar incidents from happening in the future. "I'm committed to see the end of texting and driving. It's an epidemic. Every family in our community has a family member that's been impacted by this tragic incident," Donna Glisan, the mother of the accused driver, told ABC News. "The thought of this happening to anyone else is absolutely heartbreaking. This is about her life and the lives that are going to be impacted as a result of her behavior." Related: What Exactly Is 'Texting and Driving'? Glisan's son, Frankie, 20, was sentenced to 30 days in jail in August after pleading no contest to careless driving causing the death of Darwin Soto, 29, a freshman in engineering at the university. The 18-year-old was stopped by police in Thornton, Colo., after he left the scene of a collision in which an SUV was crushed by an 18-wheeler. Frankie told police that he was texting on his phone just before the collision. The Denver Police Department has the authority to use the "K-9 Extortion Task Force" to prevent similar tragedies from happening in the future. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, a driver who is distracted by a cell phone is 16 times more likely to cause a fatal accident than a distracted driver who is not using a cellphone. Frankie was still driving on a suspended license after he was charged in September. "Texting and driving has got to stop. The fact that he has a head injury doesn't matter," Glisan said. "There needs to be consequences. I don't want someone else to go through this." According to the Denver Post, the task force was created in response to a rise in fatal car accidents that involved distracted drivers in 2009. The task force, funded by the city, will deploy four to six police officers who "work in unmarked cars and look out for distracted drivers." The officer on duty in a cell phone-involved accident "has no authority to place a suspect in the back of a patrol car. That authority is reserved for an off-duty officer or a police dog," The Denver Post reported. Related: Your Cellphone Is Making You Fat — How to Fix
