AutoCAD

CAD is based on two operating systems:

Windows and the Unix-like ones.

Windows clients can be used directly via COM, or AutoLISP/Visual LISP, or by WinDSP, a command-line interface. For Unix-like systems, AutoLISP, Visual LISP and AutoCAD Server are available.

Commands The commands used in AutoCAD are provided by the user and the application itself to perform tasks. A command can be either in the standard or an extended version. The commands can be in the form of a macro which allows them to be executed in the form of keyboard shortcuts. Some commands, like the dimension and project commands, allow a user to create a dimension or generate a cross-section by placing the cursor on a specific point, respectively.

Several specialized commands are available for editing certain features of a drawing, for example: the Move tool allows users to easily move, copy or delete objects in a drawing. The Dimension tool allows users to create, edit and convert objects into standard dimension lines. The Revise command allows users to undo previous operations to a specific point and save previous versions of a drawing. The same commands are available for Windows and Unix-like systems. User interface

AutoCAD's interface is based on the ribbon-style user interface which is composed of several tabs. The interface elements available to the user in AutoCAD are: The drawing area This contains the layers, references and materials. The layer panel contains the tools for managing layers, such as moving, deleting or creating them. The material panel, on the other hand, contains the tools for managing material, such as new material creation, deletion and modification. Finally, the reference panel shows the references used in the drawing. The drawing window This shows the layers, the drawing area, and the topological and property windows. The topological window displays the properties of an object, the properties window contains information such as the properties of a dimension and the properties panel shows the properties for the current drawing area. Finally, the properties panel contains the tools for managing properties such as tools to create properties, modify the properties, edit properties and delete properties. The status bar The status bar shows the status of all open drawings and the number of sheets in a drawing. The status area is divided into six sections: The status bar itself It shows the current status of the drawing, the number of sheets, the number of users and the ca3bfb1094
