free software it works with real-time.Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to systems and methods for detecting unwanted disturbance of the flow of a fluid in a conduit and, more particularly, to such systems and methods for controlling such disturbance. Description of the Related Art In a large number of areas of technology and industry, there is a need for control systems to allow the flow of a fluid to be controlled and/or modulated. One example is found in the use of devices for controlling or modulating the flow of blood through a patient, such as, for example, artificial heart valves, which are used as replacement for damaged natural valves in patients. In such devices, a valve is used to regulate blood flow, which in many such devices is used as a substitute for a patient's natural mitral and tricuspid valves. Although a few
