EA SPORTS today revealed details for FIFA 20, an all-new edition of the world’s most popular video game franchise, FIFA. FIFA 20 launches worldwide on August 24 on PlayStation 4, Xbox One, Windows PC and Xbox Game Pass. A teaser trailer is now available here: “This is the most ambitious FIFA yet, and EA SPORTS brings a fresh approach to the core gameplay that will make you play like a true football legend,” said David Rutter, Chief Creative Officer, EA SPORTS. “It’s a big year for us and we’re committed to delivering the most authentic soccer experience, thanks to close cooperation with the National Football League Players Association. We’re excited for fans to get their hands on FIFA 20 on August 24.” In FIFA 20, the core gameplay gets a new energy that transitions from player to player, game to game, and session to session. Players will feel the environment around them and in the air with greater efficiency, as well as controlling ball movement more naturally. Shot power is increased on both half-volley and chip shots. Players will also have more skills to perform, including a new free kick called the ‘Cannonball,’ as well as improved skill animations and passes. New Real Player Motion Technology Powered by Player Data HyperReal Player Motion Technology is in FIFA 20, allowing players to feel like genuine soccer superstars. Players will feel the environment around them and in the air with greater energy and excitement. The artificial intelligence on the pitch also gets a major upgrade. Using motion data captured from 22 real-life players at a live-action NFL game, players are more engaged and animated when trying to connect with the ball and taking on players in the air. Based on this, FIFA 20 delivers completely new AI for players, and makes these interactions even more unpredictable and difficult. More improved passing Players will also have a far greater understanding of passing, as their vision will be more accurate. This will make you feel more like a true-to-life footballer as you connect with teammates in this creative new way. Finally, players will also retain a natural connection between the positions
