There are two ways of such Ca²⁺ retention, namely intracellular accumulation and extracellular retention. The former may be divided into two groups according to the cause of accumulation. One is the increase of Ca²⁺ influx due to enhanced function of voltage-dependent Ca²⁺ channel. The other is the decrease of Ca²⁺ influx due to an increase of Na⁺-Ca²⁺ exchange. The latter causes the decreased Ca²⁺ efflux from myocardium through the Na⁺-Ca²⁺ exchange as a consequence of increase of Ca²⁺ concentration. The latter Ca²⁺ retention can be counteracted by inhibition of Na⁺-Ca²⁺ exchange. In addition, it is reported that the increase of Ca²⁺ retention by blockade of Na⁺/Ca²⁺ exchanger may cause a secondary retention of Ca²⁺. This is explained by the fact that trans-membrane Na⁺ and Ca²⁺ movement may participate in the reverse Na⁺-Ca²⁺ exchange. Thus, the present findings indicate that the increased Ca²⁺ retention due to increase of Na⁺-Ca²⁺ exchange or e79caf774b
