

Living the Deal is a business management game. You've spent a life in poverty, with no schooling, no friends and no money. You've begun a new venture, an import company, which is going to help you break the cycle of poor life. You have to balance the books of the business and make sure you invest funds into the best products and services. You'll have employees to manage as well as family. Don't make friends, family is out of reach and you have to focus on your company. Will you be able to manage the business, find the best suppliers and make the right investments in time and without going broke? Or will you eventually fail? Have fun while you make your way to the top, or fall at the bottom and die poor. How to play The basic idea is quite simple, choose your actions. There are 4 different types of actions you can take: Buy or Sell - this is the main, and the most important one in the game. With these 2 actions, you have to gather resources and then you have to use the resources to buy a product, or sell it for money. Loan a Product - this is a way to easily earn money. You can easily spend a lot of money on things which won't return in your favor. But maybe you can make a loan to your suppliers and earn money, or keep some money for yourself, and use it later to sell a product. Invest - when you decide to invest your money in a product, you cannot use this action to pay the product to your suppliers, as the supplier would give your money back. But you can use it to buy an even better product, and earn extra money from it, or, pay more money as a loan. Balance - when you want to balance your books, you have to check if your inventory is too small or too big, it's a way to save money and invest into products. Furthermore, there are multiple currencies in the game. Your inventories are composed of different currencies, each representing a different category. You have to balance the quality of the products, of the funds invested, and your income. When you balance the 3 categories, you can reach levels in the game. Once you reach a certain level, you can choose to compete in the higher levels, which means you have to do better all the time

Eternal Lore

Making choices in every race matters in life, but in the games they truly make the difference. Your choices in Eternal Lore will change the fate of the universe you're thrown into because of the choices you make in your mission. You play a Hero that set an ultimatum for 7 races to make one final choice regarding their destinies. It will be determined by which path you choose.

Before you come up with your choices, sit down with whatever's been thrown at you. With each of your missions will be an explanation that will tell you what the choices between the two will lead to. Do you have a suitable backup plan? There might be another option when presented to you. Even after you've made the decision, there's still somethings you can do to help make things a bit smoother for the mission. More on that next.

If you fail to finish the mission, you are given a chance to try again. But if you fail again, you have to replay the mission until you complete it successfully.

The more choices you make during your missions, the more possibilities there are and the more choice-driven power you'll receive as you rise up the ladder to the spotlight.

Existing Characters

There are roughly 200 currently but they all have different stats from one another. Unlike other games that only allow one successor, you have a choice in every race on whether or not to pass on switch: Orion and the Secrets of Sea Monsters As the largest star in the sky visible from the earth, Orion is easily recognized by anyone who pays even cursory attention to the night sky. Just to the right of Orion is the head of the Little Dipper (or Cassiopeia) and just to his left is the brilliant blinking eye of the Pleiades. Both of these are bright stars and especially easy to identify. Orion, however, is much easier to identify. All of the rest of his stars are binocular or low power and are distinctly smaller—so they can easily be misidentified with stars on the horizon—by any more than a casual observer. The reason is because that head of Orion is the most-widely viewed star in the sky. It's the brightest of all the star clusters and it doesn't just make Orion easily visible. It makes it an island in the sea of blackness at our night sky's center. If one looks up and sees this single bright star, the remaining stars—even that lovely cluster of Pleiades—seem to be far away, even dim. So if you have never before paid any attention to the star system of Orion, it's worth a trip to the internet. Scroll down to locate the constellation of Orion and start clicking. You'll see a myriad of star charts to explore. Because the Big Dipper contains a seventh star—the one seen at its end, the lowest in the constellation—each of the three bodies of the Dipper can be subdivided into seven stars, as Orion is. And when you find the constellation of Orion, click on the detailed chart of the stars therein. Not only will you find the star cluster best known to the general public—i.e., the bright one in the middle of the picture—you'll find one in each of the big arms of the constellation, to the left and right of that group of stars. Click on the star farthest to the right or left in the big Dipper arms. Each of these stars are the faintest and the ones most rewarding to see. As you look down this pattern you will notice some odd things. Faint stars—we might call them dimmer stars—are generally the highest in the sky because they are out of our atmosphere. As if the nearer star clouds below our atmosphere block the light of the stars above those clouds. This is why the Big Dipper (the skeleton of the campfire) is higher than the Great Square

Art of the Rail is a cross between a business simulation, transport management game and a sandbox world builder. Building rail networks and driving a train through them is fun - but you need to have a solid business plan and a smooth rail system to start generating profits. Plus... you need to keep your tracks clear of snow and ice if you want to move your goods. The game is primarily Multiplayer, with the exception of the 'single player' mode that allows single player game types, asset creation, and short sandbox based scenarios. Multiplayer allows you to play with up to 16 human players on Steam, Mumble, Teamspeak or direct Internet connection. Art of the Rail is a long term title; it is being built from the ground up and needs to be iterated on to evolve into the final game. At the moment, the game is at just over 60% completion. The full release will include features such as all content at launch. While there is no set release date - there is a plan in place and the team is working to meet this. Art of the Rail will be available as a retail title in multiple editions: Just the game - a digital package delivered on Steam, or a boxed retail title. The Art of the Rail Player's Edition - a complete premium package with the game + all DLCs unlocked (currently at 15 out of 12) The Art of the Rail Modder's Edition - a complete modding kit including all DLC, Steam workshop assets, and the tools to create your own scenarios with the game. All of these editions include early access to pre-release updates. The Art of the Rail Player's Edition also includes early access to the Art of the Rail Modder's Edition. Please check back periodically to see what is currently available as some aspects of the game are being iterated on. We do not have a target launch day yet. First and foremost, Art of the Rail is a game that is being built by an all volunteer team from the 'spirit of community' of the steam community. While the game is a commercial product and we will be making money, we do not intend to take the usual treatment by focusing this all on us. This is not really a mod; the source assets and tools were built and provided to us by other community members, for their benefit and enjoyment in the Steam Community. Allows you to build and explore your own unique land of custom buildings, decorations, enemies, and bosses in an RPG sandbox. Features:
