I'm a beginner in C. I had a few questions about pointers in C. 1) I know the difference between dereference operator and assignment operator. When I make code like: #include int main(){ int p = (int)0x12345678; *p = 10; printf("%d ", *p); } The code compiled correctly in gcc as the above code, and there was no warning message at all. I used gcc -c -Wall to compile, so I am not sure if gcc has a warning function. I do not know if that is the reason. 2) If I add another assignment line before the printf statement, I get a warning: #include int main(){ int p = (int)0x12345678; *p = 10; *p = 10; //warning: assignment of a local pointer. printf("%d ", *p); } 3) But I know that if there were only one function, the code would be OK. #include int *func(void) { int p = (int)0x12345678; *p = 10; return p; } int main(){ int *funcPtr = func(); printf("%d ", *funcPtr); } 0cc13bf012

I gave you examples of how words were related to specific things. You might have come up with other examples. In this lesson, I will give you some more examples of how words are related to specific things. You will use this information to build a word list of your own. I have prepared several lists of words for you. When you are finished, I want you to write at least a paragraph that includes five to six new words. Don't worry if you are not familiar with all of them; just pick the ones you feel comfortable with. I have divided the following lists into groups of related words. Don't worry if
