However, most notably, parathyroid carcinoma is by far the most common parathyroid carcinoma, usually presenting as a single lesion.[@B5] In the rare case of bilateral parathyroid carcinomas, a thorough clinical evaluation is required for its early diagnosis and potentially can lead to a resection of a normal parathyroid gland, especially when the nodular lesions are distinctly separate in the neck. It is difficult to identify which parathyroid gland should be removed during a minimally invasive procedure, and thus, careful preoperative evaluation is essential. C[ONCLUSION]{.smallcaps} {#sec1-4
