We describe here a 63-year-old female patient with Sjögren's syndrome, associated with autoimmune diseases such as thyroiditis, rheumatoid arthritis and lupus, who developed an autoimmune-mediated necrotizing myopathy. Anti-synthetase autoantibodies were positive and antibodies against the 60 kDa Ro/La autoantigen were also detected. The patient developed a rapidly progressive and refractory myopathy. Although prednisolone and cyclosporin A initially provided some relief, the patient eventually died. We conclude that in patients with Sjögren's syndrome, the production of autoimmune-mediated necrotizing myopathy is not infrequent and this might present a differential diagnosis to myositis associated with malignancies and collagen vascular disorders. One of my last assignments for the Evening MBA, a Master of Business Administration from Sogeti's Erasmus in Switzerland, was to write a business plan for my own company. As I wrote in last post, Erasmus is an international business school, and as such is highly competitive. There's a requirement to do the first assignment of four, which meant I was not given a great deal of slack. The business plan took me over a month, which wasn't bad given how much work was involved. If you're up for the challenge, and feel you can take it on, here's my advice. We're not here to spin lies, we're here to build a sustainable business Your first challenge is to become a business builder. At the end of the day, you are not the customer or employee, you are the product. Building your own products and services can be difficult enough, but you will also need to convince people to buy from you. The customer and employee mindset will make you do some of your
