While visiting with the press, Lucasfilm creative executive Kathleen Kennedy stated that the studio is willing to provide a few pieces of information in a small amount of time. "As much as we love to talk about the film, we're a company that's very protective of our intellectual property," she said. "So, we're very careful about what we let people know. We're open to an exchange of information, but it's not just one way. So, we're open to giving people some of the information that we have, but for them to also give us some of the information they have, so it's a fairly big exchange." Kennedy and the rest of the Lucasfilm team got a small taste of information when they showed the new trailer for the film.

New characters, a new droid, and a lot more are set to be seen in the movie in addition to the returning cast of the new trilogy. "We know what the story is, we've got some supporting characters who we're very excited about," she said. "We're not going to take anything away from the way you experience the movie because we want people to have their experience." Kennedy added that the studio knows how important secrecy is in the world of cinema and how people enjoy seeing what they have yet to see. "We know how fans are, and we recognize how they like to experience it," she said. "So, it's just a delicate balance of what's best for the film, what we have to give them, and then in turn, what we have to keep for ourselves." A sequel to the original Star Wars trilogy, Rogue One: A Star Wars Story opens in U.S. theaters on December 16, 2016. The film is currently available for pre-order on iTunes. Rogue One hits UK cinemas on December 15 and the Netherlands on December 16. 6d1f23a050
